

BIOGRAPHY

Judy Kearns is a classical contemporary realist artist based in Maryland. She earned her BFA from Trinity College and completed graduate work while at Virginia Commonwealth University. Born into a family of artists, Judy is a second generation artist; her daughter is an extraordinary and sought after muralist. She studied extensively under master artists Robert Liberace and Walt Bartman, among others, who have influenced both her love of plein air and portraiture from life. She is particularly drawn to children's portraits. She explains, "I find joy in the light of the divine that radiates from these souls." Her work expertly reflects the unique way she is able capture and play with light as it dances on the natural world.

Judy has taught for many years to all ages and levels including school-based programs, private individual and group settings and has shown her work in a great number of group and private shows.

She strongly believes in the transformative and integrative power of creating and viewing art and enjoys sharing her talents with those wishing to learn more about art and living a life of purpose.
